THE ADVERTISER'S SEMI-WEEKLY

BREVITIES

(From Wednesday Advertiser.)
An order setting aside seven acres of land near the Kapa School as a public playground and park was issued by the Governor yesterday.

W. E. Server, a local automobile mechanic, was arrested last night for driving an automobile while intoxicated. He was injured when the machine crashed into a telephone pole on Alapai Street near King.

The sanitary commission is preparing its report and the code to be submitted to the legislature. No radical changes in it are contemplated in the present code. Two meetings a week are being held by the commission.

Application for a passport for himself, wife and seven children was made yesterday in the office of George R. Clark, clerk of the federal court, by Jose Merino, Italian. The Merinos expect to leave shortly for Auckland, New Zealand. They departed here a short time ago from the coast.

Charged with having entered the room of Miss Ruth Maker of the Ingersoll Company in a local hotel Monday night, L. P. Taylor, a waiter on the steamer Matsonia, was sentenced to serve one month in prison by Judge Monarrat in the police court yesterday morning.

William J. Coelho, former senator from Maui, now an employee of the land office, has offered his services to the Hawaiian members of the legislature for their preliminary conferences. He says he is willing to serve without pay. Coelho is also an applicant for the position of clerk of the senate.

The matter of untaxed and howling dogs is "important for the peace of this community," according to Supervisor Horner, who at the meeting of the board of supervisors last night flew to the rescue of the citizens who, he says, are being kept awake at night by such howling. The police committee reported on the matter, and said it had, acting on complaint of residents of School Street, instructed the police to pick up all untaxed dogs.

(From Thursday Advertiser.)
Maj. James D. Dougherty, aide to the Governor, has been granted a leave of absence for one month from December 5.

The Oahu loan fund commission yesterday granted Pienaco & Gomez, Maole ditch contractors, five days extension of time in which to produce their bond.

Charles R. Forbes, chairman of the harbor commission, has ordered work to begin on the drafting of plans for the structures that are to cover the three new piers, 8, 9 and 10.

Students of the Honolulu Military Academy enjoyed an old fashioned Christmas party last night in the school armory. Governor Pinkham, Madame Melia and many society people were among the guests.

Charles R. Forbes, superintendent of public works, will go to Hawaii today for a complete rest. It is stated that he is ordered to do so by his physician, who says his condition demands that he cease work for a time.

News received here yesterday of the sudden death of William Forbes Morgan in London, England, at the age of seventy-three years. Death occurred yesterday. The deceased was the father of Harold Morgan, of this city.

William Mobua, a fifteen-year-old inmate of the Boys' Industrial School at Waialeale, died yesterday in the Leahi Home, Kaimuki, and was buried during the afternoon in Loch View Cemetery, Pearl City. He was a native of Hawaii.

A warning siren was placed on the city ambulance yesterday. The horn is of the Aermore type and is operated by the exhaust. It has four notes which omit a shrill whistle. The new apparatus was placed on the machine on the suggestion of the supervisors.

"Guessing at the guest and also the topic" is the advance dope on the Rotary Club luncheon program for today. "It may be highbrow stuff," says the club's press agent, "but will probably be something better. Halls, Butler and Heiser underwrite it as good Rotary gospel."

Judge Clemons in the federal court yesterday signed and filed the final award of $623.92 which is to be distributed among the men of the company in the case of the Miller Salvage Company against the British ship "Celtic Chief." The suit was begun years ago in the local admiralty court.

Announcement was made yesterday by Miss Helen Salisbury that Miss Grace Channon, general secretary of the Long Beach Y. W. C. A., will be general secretary of the local organization on February 1. Miss Salisbury will return to the mainland and take up her work in the field department of the association.

After a course of training in the paymaster's school in Washington, C. D. Bishop, paymaster for the territorial naval militia, returned on the transport Sheridan Tuesday night. Mr. Bishop took courses in both disbursing and accounting. "The work, he said, was modeled on the lines of an ordinary school class curriculum with study hours and recitation hours."

At any rate, what a fine chance to forget the Marina and the Arabic violations of pledges this peace talk affords.

SHIPPING MAGAZINE LAUDS HONOLULU'S BIG HARBOR

Praising Honolulu's harbor, its docking facilities and systematic coaling system, the Pacific Marine Review, one of the leading shipping magazines in the December number, gives considerable space to the subject including photographs.

One article, "Neighboring Hawaiian Islands," deals with passenger accommodations to the Islands and the other "The Cross Roads" gives the history of Honolulu's harbor.

MONEY COLLECTED FOR HEADQUARTERS

Local Salvation Army Announces Beretania Street Property Will Be Bought

Brigadier Robert Dublin, in charge of the local branch of the Salvation Army, announced yesterday that sufficient funds had been collected to secure the purchase of the land and the building on Beretania Street between Nuuanu and Fort Street, which will be used as the official headquarters of the organization in Honolulu.

When the movement was started to secure headquarters for the organization, officers of the army declared that they would collect $30,000 in thirty days. The time set will be up sometime next week. More than $20,000 has already been collected, which will be ample to purchase the property on which the organization has an option.

"We will not take possession of the property until after the holidays," said Brigadier Dublin yesterday, "for the reason that we have not secured enough money to carry out the plan of alterations. We find that during the holiday seasons there are so many other things to be attended to that we cannot give sufficient time to the collection campaign. This will not delay the work seriously, however, as we are convinced that we will have little trouble collecting the money for the alterations after the holidays. At that time plans for the changes will be rushed and we will lose no time in getting into the new building."

The plans for the alterations are being prepared by Architects Emory and Webb.

J. DUNBAR WRIGHT LAUDS HAWAII-NEI

Begins Lecture Series On Board T. K. K. Liner

The first of a series of illustrated lectures on Hawaii that will be given before audiences in all parts of the mainland, was delivered by J. Dunbar Wright, noted traveler and author, aboard the steamer Shinyo Maru on his departure from Honolulu recently, according to mail advices received yesterday.

Mr. Wright, who is well known here, spent several months making motion pictures and lantern slides of Hawaiian scenes, including army life, Waikiki and the volcano. His purpose is to combine lectures on Hawaii and the Orient with his motion pictures and stereoscopic views and devote the proceeds to charity. The pictures of the army secured at Hawaiian forts and posts are declared to be the best ever taken here. They will be shown in Washington.

The lecture given aboard the Shinyo Maru was highly praised and the pictures of the volcano and Waikiki were heartily applauded.

The second lecture by Mr. Wright, the first on the mainland, was given before the Bohemian Club of San Francisco December 9.

WAIKAEA HOMESTEAD LOTS WILL BE SOLD

Commissioner Rivenburgh States Hilo Land Is Available

Land Commissioner Rivenburgh announced a few days ago that the famous Waiakae homestead lots near Hilo, will soon be made available.

A contract was let recently to the county of Hawaii by the superintendent of public works for the construction of a road through the homesteads, which will connect Kuba wharf with the Volcano Road. It is expected that this road will be completed within three months or less.

"As soon as the road is built," said Rivenburgh, "I shall put some of the lots on the market in order to get money to pay for the road, the law requiring that homestead roads shall be paid for out of the proceeds of the sale of the lots. It has been impossible to open up the lots until there was a road through them."

The lots that are to be sold are those down near the river, the land commissioner states.

HAWAII CHINESE GETS LICENSE AS AVIATOR

Another Chinese boy of Hawaii has been added to the ranks of those who are now qualified aviators. Sen Yet Young of this city was one of seven students graduated from the Atlantic Coast Aeronautical Station, the Curtis school at Newport, New York, last month according to advices received yesterday.

Sen Yet Young celebrated his gaining an Aero Club pilot's license over both land and water by tendering a farewell banquet to the students and officers of the school. The banquet was in Chinese style and proved a unique treat to Young's guests on account of the strangeness of the dishes served. The young aviator is reported to be returning to Hawaii.

UNCLE SAM MUST KEEP ON BUILDING BIG BATTLESHIPS

Secretary Daniels in His Report Says Time For Disarmament Is Not Yet

URGES ORGANIZATION OF NEW AIR SERVICE FOR FLEETS

Points Out Need For Placing Largest Possible Guns On Our Warcraft

(By The Associated Press)

WASHINGTON, December 7.—Until all nations agree to reduce their armament, the United States must continue to increase its naval power, Secretary Daniels declares in his annual report, made public tonight, and which urges that funds be appropriated at once to begin building forty-two additional ships.

"I feel it my duty to warn as solemnly as I may," the secretary says, "after costing the huge expenditures for the Navy authorized at the last session of congress, 'against the danger that lies in a possible feeling on the part of our people that the Navy has been placed where it belongs among the great navies of the world, and there is nothing further to be done. Complacent retrospection is the father of dry rot. We have made a magnificent beginning, but that it must not be forgotten by the public that the same intelligent appreciation of our needs, the same willingness to provide for these needs, must be shown this year, and every succeeding year, if we are to finish what we have commenced.'"

Must Increase Strength
"I earnestly hope the time is not far distant when this act of congress will result in such an agreement," he continues, "and that the nations of the earth will have the statesmanship to devise effective means of preserving the world's peace without constantly building ever-increasing dreadnaughts at ever-increasing cost. Until that hour arrives the United States cannot safely adopt any policy other than that of continuing the policy of steadily increasing its naval strength."

Picturing the result of construction now contemplated, Secretary Daniels says the main fighting elements of the fleet, completed and in commission in 1921, will be twenty-seven dreadnaughts of the first line, supported by six battle cruisers, twenty-five second-line battle ships, thirteen scout cruisers, one hundred and eight destroyers, twelve fleet submarines and one hundred and thirty coast defense submarines. "While there is no possibility of predicting what rank among the naval powers the country will then take, he adds, the authorization of such a program has been accepted as assurance that the United States has definitely embarked on the policy of building an adequate navy."

Many Difficulties Faced
Secretary Daniels indicates clearly the difficulties faced by the department, in the following language:

"The last naval bill does not give to the department any additional or extraordinary powers in connection with placing the contracts for these vessels or in obtaining materials for their construction. It is hoped that the necessary will not arise of having to ask for such powers, as a number of shipbuilders and manufacturers have shown an attitude of willingness to assist the department in meeting the unusual situation created by the desire of the country to commence and to expedite an entirely unprecedented naval program at a time when the industrial resources of the country are already taxed to their utmost capacity in meeting the demands of tremendous trade activity, both domestic and foreign, in every branch of business. It may be necessary, however, for congress to enact legislation of this character to insure the early completion of the program of construction."

The report touches briefly on many activities of the navy department and commends highly the new organization and coordination that is being effected by Admiral Benson, chief of operations. In addition to the report by Admiral Benson is appended, showing the rapid progress being made in every line of development. The most disappointing feature of the year, according to the general board and Admiral Benson, has been the slow progress with development of naval aircraft.

"Undoubtedly much preliminary work has been done experimentally which does not show," the board says, "but the application of this very important branch of the service to the practical uses of the fleet has not yet been fully developed. Satisfactory aircraft do not appear as yet to be available for use with the fleet."

The board recommends a new organization of the flying service under a directing officer in the office of the chief of operations. While admitting the slowness of aeronautical development, Admiral Benson expresses the hope that a big machine, designed and built by the Navy and now under test, may solve the problems encountered. The report shows that the Navy now has seventeen aeroplanes in active service and that sixty more have been ordered. In addition, several French and British-made machines have been ordered.

Peace Proposals

IT is improbable that the Entente will listen at this time to the peace proposals from Berlin, Vienna, Sofia and Constantinople, even though what little appears to be known of the terms the Central Powers are now willing to accept are very, very far from those heretofore talked of, with their hundreds of billions of indemnities, their places in the sun, their control of the Balkans and the restoration of all the lost colonies.

Should the war end today, it would end as a stalemate and all that Great Britain, France and Belgium have declared they are fighting for would go un gained. Germany bases her claim to the right to suggest terms on the fact that her military strength is unshaken, and it was to smash "Prussian militarism" that Belgium made her sacrifices, France stood for two years of cruel punishment and Great Britain has raised and trained her millions.

It is possible of course, that the Entente will grasp the opportunity offered by the Central Powers to end the war, but it seems improbable. The German chancellor may be moved by motives wholly foreign to those expressed, and the Allies may be aware of the real reason. The Rumanian thrust may have been intended solely to pave the way for the peace talk, thus justifying the extension of the lines and the sacrifices required for that offensive campaign, and the Entente strategists may be as well aware of this as Bethmann-Hollweg himself. Germany, on her side, may be aware of the extent of the tremendous preparations said to be under way for the spring offensive, as it is not believed that Great Britain has struck her real blow, and fear that the future holds no further hope of gain may be the underlying Teuton motive.

Again, the internal conditions of Germany may have made it expedient for the Kaiser and his chancellor to impress upon the German people the claim already made that the Entente is intent upon the despoliation of Germany on the lines that Belgium and Northern France have been spoiled, and the refusal of the Allies to listen to the terms of the Central Powers may be desired in order to rekindle the fighting spirit of the Fatherland and stiffen the resistance of the lines of defense.

Last August, on the second anniversary of the outbreak of the war, the Kaiser stated that the blame for further fighting would rest upon the Entente, just as he says it now. At that time it was undoubtedly an utterance to hearten the German army and the German people. His message, addressed to the chancellor, said:

"Still hard times are ahead. After the terrible storm of two years of war, a desire for sunshine and peace is stirring in all human hearts, but the war continues because the battle cry of the enemy governments is still the destruction of Germany. Blame for further bloodshed falls only on our enemies. The firm confidence has never left me that Germany is invincible in spite of the superior numbers of our enemies, and every day confirms this view. "Germany knows she is fighting for her existence. She knows her strength and she relies on God's help. Therefore nothing can shake her determination or her assurance. We shall bring this struggle to such an end that our empire will be protected against future attack and that a free field will be assured for the peaceful development of German genius and labor. "We shall live free, secure and strong among the nations of the world. This right, nobody shall or will snatch from us. I ask you to make this manifesto public."

Electoral Votes

MR. WILSON has won over Mr. Hughes. What this signifies in its relation to population and the financial support given to the nation by some of the States involved may be indicated by a few figures for the States that have aligned themselves in either column, says Leslie's Weekly. On the basis of the census of 1910, the States carried in the last election by Mr. Hughes contained 45,901,739 citizens. Those carried by Mr. Wilson numbered their population at 45,737,696, or 164,043 less than the population of the States that went for Mr. Hughes. From a standpoint of the revenue obtained from the division of the States thus represented, the divergence is much more striking. The States carried by Mr. Hughes pay into the treasury three-fifths of the total contributed directly by the people of the United States toward the support of the Government. In round numbers the receipts from the Hughes States in 1915 was $325,000,000, and from the Wilson States, $177,000,000. At the election just closed the solid South gave Mr. Wilson 139 electoral votes, as against 45 electoral votes cast for Mr. Hughes by the State of New York. Yet in 1915 there was paid to the Government in the form of internal revenue taxes and special taxes on corporations by the 12 southern States a sum less than $85,000,000, while in the same year the single State of New York contributed in taxes of like character more than $86,000,000. A consideration of the individual income tax returns for 1915 is of even greater interest. The solid phalanx of the Southern States under review contributed in this form of direct taxation in the year mentioned the sum of $1,727,845. New York in the same year paid into the treasury of the United States an income tax totaling $17,417,537.

The San Francisco Argonaut is amongst those who refuse to be comforted in regard to the election results. It is of an opinion that Wilson was reelected by the solid yellow-streak vote, cast by the kind of men who say: "Give me two dollars a bushel for my wheat and you may spit in my eye."

Plain Case of Duty

THE HILO TRIBUNE has taken up for discussion "the problem of reapportionment," which is to come before the legislature at the ensuing session, and asks a number of questions. The Tribune, we take it, is opposed to the idea of a majority of house and senate being apportioned to Oahu. "What does Honolulu want a reapportionment by the legislature so badly for?" that paper inquires, asking also if a reapportionment on the basis of population would "be fair to the Territory."

But it is not Honolulu nor Oahu which calls for the reapportionment. So far as any expression of official opinion is concerned, or so far as any of the members of the legislature from this island is concerned, there is no call whatsoever for a reapportionment. There has not been an elected member from Oahu, so far as we know, who has had any idea of either suggesting that a reapportionment be made, that there should be any disturbance of the status quo, or that the Oahu delegation should unite to fight for a fairer representation.

The insistence in this case, comes from the law of the land, Congress, in its wisdom, when it enacted the Organic Act, declared that "the legislature, at its first regular session after the census enumeration shall be ascertained, and from time to time thereafter, shall reapportion the membership in the senate and house of representatives among the senatorial and representative districts on the basis of the population in each of said districts who are citizens of the Territory." The word is "shall," not "may," it should be noted.

Does the Tribune, or any other representative of good government, or any advocate of consistency, desire to go on record as believing that a self-respecting body of lawmakers can go on session after session itself defying the law? Can there be any respect for the laws enacted by a body which is to all intents and purposes illegally constituted? Will our legislature be acting honestly if it accepts money from the United States for the expenses of the session and then refuses to obey the provisions of the law enacted by congress concerning its duties?

For our part, we cannot believe that there is an honest man in Hawaii who does not want the legislature to obey law as well as make law.

To Beat the Band

THERE'S no use talking, says the New York Telegram, it's getting to be a hard world for musicians. Now along comes a Chicago woman with a charge that the bass drum, beloved of minstrel parades for so these many years, is positively immoral and should be deleted from the complement of any self-respecting band. As if that weren't enough, however, the indefatigable finder of defects continues on in her search and discovers the saxophone and the ukulele are also not above suspicion. She has only been at the business for a day or two, it is understood from despatches from the seat of the disturbance, but it is expected that, with the proper encouragement, she will have put the violin, cornet and the rest of the contrivances that make the onestep popular, under the ban within the next few hours. She appears to be a fast worker.

While not in the least desiring to appear ungallant, the lady's attitude reminds us of nothing more than the famous character of the up-State village who insisted on stemming the tide of the Spring flood by the power of the human eye. When the mourners had dried their eyes they decided the poor fellow just wasn't responsible for his actions anyway, and the manner of his demise was left off the tombstone.

If the woman of the capacious tastes is at all conversant with modern colloquialisms, she has chosen a splendid medium for her fault-finding in beginning with the bass drum. She had best seize hold of that instrument and, with all the ardor of which she is possessed, let her beat—but go ahead and make your own jokes about it. We're tired of it.

In his little conversation with the representatives of the College Club, the Governor appears to have taken the ladies on one of his personally conducted tours of the world, as well as having given them an extended course in history as he has helped to make it, with a few side remarks on ethics, etiquette, the doctrine of descent, international comity and metaphysics. He also mentioned, we are led to believe, the local department of education.

At any rate, what a fine chance to forget the Marina and the Arabic violations of pledges this peace talk affords.
